

Tim in KY TdF Stage 14 is 118 kilometers from Tarbes to the top of the Tourmalet. The peak will be approached from the west, which is usually the direction of the descent.

Tim in KY What the stage lacks in length, it makes up for in height. There are two Cat 1 climbs, one smack in the middle and the other the finale. There is also a little Cat 4 early. What is not climbing is false flat through the valleys.

Tim in KY "Romain Bardet (AG2R La Mondiale) didn't stop at the finish line on stage 13 of the Tour de France, nor at his team's camper van 200 metres down the road. He kept going, deeper and deeper into Pau, disappearing into the distance." AG2R doesn't have a bus?

20-Jul-2019
07:17:09

Charlie in Tenn Well, We have done a lot of moving stuff, attended the Char Con game convention (I work on staff), and volunteered for a week long Hogwarts type summer school at the Unitarian church. We have bought a house in Oak Ridge TN which will close on July 31 and sold our house which will close Aug 30. We still have some renovation/repairs for our current house but today I am hanging with the lugnuts for the race.

20-Jul-2019
07:23:22

Charlie in Tenn About 100 miles though we are on opposite sides of Knoxville so it is closer to 2 hours driving usually.

20-Jul-2019
07:26:50

BusterSci To your question, Tim: I share the belief that the race will be decided above 2000m. We peek at that height today, but Thursday, Friday and Saturday are when they do it for real. That's the altitude when Columbian hearts may make a difference.

20-Jul-2019
07:53:58

Katie S I'm up a little bit earlier than expected. Woke up to hear a squeaking sound - sounded like racoons beginning to charter, but I don't think it was -- then heard a soft thud and what sounded like a bird in distress. I thought it fell, but my partner said "The creature took it up the walk." What? I suspect an agile predator snatched a sleeping bird. ... A few months back, a neighbor's motion-detection camera caught a cougar walking across their front walk

BusterSci Robbie is making a really good point about Alaphilippe's handling of his TT bike. Donny questioned the believability. That course was designed for a guy like Alaphilippe. There were few opportunities for a specialist or even semi-specialist to get into a rhythm. But juju took corners like he was on a road bike and his sort of explosiveness was perfectly suited to the technical course.
