

	Tim in KY Il Lombardia is the final monument of every road racing season. Some	10-05
	even refer to it as the season finale even though there are still later races on the road calendar, most notably Paris-Tours on Sunday. This years race is 274 convoluted kilometers through the countryside of northern Italy from Bergamo to the lake district at Como.	15:19

	Tim in KY With about 50 kilometers to go, the riders have to scale the daunting Muro	10-05
	Di Sormano which is 7 km long and averages 15.8% with some ramps approaching 30%.	15:29

	Tim in KY There two challenging climbs in the final 20 kilometers, as well, the last	10-05
	starting with 8 km to go in the village of San Fermo Della Battaglia. From the summit at 5.3 km to go it is a twisty descent to the red kite and then flat to the finish.	15:36

BusterSci Lorenzo Rota (Bardiani-CSF), Matthias Le Turnier (Cofidis), Pier Paolo De Negri (Nippo Vini Fantini) and Lennard Hofstede (Sunweb) are the four that have joined the break. 10-07 05:16

Joanna in New York I have no idea how to handicap this race. A great many capable riders, but how exhausted are they at the end of the season? Is it a course for Yates, Calamity Jane, Alaphilippe? 10-07 05:16

BusterSci Or Uran, after his win earlier this week. 10-07 05:18

BusterSci Aru and Quintana also showed well on the finishing climb. 10-07 05:18

BusterSci I was not smart enough, nor did I study well enough, to get more than a peek inside that world. I got enough to accept the fact that it was there, but I never REALLY understood it. 10-07 05:28

BusterSci Break is now 4:40 10-07 05:29

I suspect, should you have pursued the study of physics and mathematics long enough, you would have reached a point where the more advanced stuff explained enough about the "assumptions" that you would then accept their validity and stuff would have started falling into place. 10-07 05:37
